            <h1> The Beginnings </h1>
             As a child, Odelia Coutier had visited the old bakery, Grandma's Cookies, nearly every week. <q> My grandparents would take me there and buy me a cookie. They were amazing, definitely my favorite, </q> stated Coutier. When she had learned the bakery had closed at the age of 12, she was  devastated.  <q> I couldn't believe that I could no longer eat those cookies. So, I decided to take matters into my own hands. </q>

            <h2> 10 Years Later…</h2>  Coutier began learning how to bake herself, however she was never able to replicate the taste of the cookies she remembered. <q> I decided that I was fed up with my attempts and I went over to the owner of Grandma's Cookies herself, </q> she laughed. The owner was kind enough to hand down the cookie recipe, as she no longer had use for it.
            <blockquote> It was a dream come true! I wanted to share the taste of these cookies with the others who also missed them, so I thought: why not open a new bakery? </blockquote>   She did just that. Right in the building of the previous bakery, Coutier opened Downtown Bakery within the last week. Business is already booming, according to Coutier. <q> Everyone who comes in is eager to try the cookies again. I didn't realize how many other people had missed them! </q> she exclaimed. If you want to try these cookies too, come down to Main Street and you'll see the popular bakery there. Open from 7 am to 2 pm.
